Translation Notes

Page 7: Transit of Mercury

A transit of Mercury is an astronomical phenomenon wherein the planet Mercury (the closest planet to the sun) crosses directly between the sun and the earth. If viewed from earth on these occasions, Mercury is seen as a small black dot against the very bright background of the sun. Transits of Mercury are fairly common, occurring a little less than every ten years. While the manga references a transit that occurred in 2006, the next will occur in 2016.

Papo-kun is a Japanese character created to promote safety especially amongst young children and elementary schoolers. Banners, statues, and etc. were found throughout Japan at the time of this manga's publication. More information can be found in Japanese at http://www.papo.jp/.

On Souvenirs:

In Japan, it is customary for those going places (i.e. another city, another country, etc.) to bring small souvenirs (called omiage, おみやげ) back for friends, family, coworkers, and so forth. While this custom borders obligation with adults, those in high school would normally only bring souvenirs back for family, good friends (usually of the same gender), and boyfriends/girlfriends. Hence Kotozuka's unease and Haraguchi's qualms.

On Kotozuka's name:

Previous translators have translated Kotozuka's name as Kotodzuka as the kana reading of her name is actually ことづか, not ことずか. There is a definite difference in pronunciation between dzu (づ) and zu (ず), but both are commonly romanized as "zu" because of the non-intuitive reading of dzu. Henceforth, Renzokusei Scans will employ "Kotozuka" in its translations.
